

Dr. Bentley, in 1847, took the advice of his favorite editor, Horace Greeley, and went west, settling in Colorado. In a few years by the practice of his profession and fortunate investments he accumulated another comfortable fortune. Accompanied by a guide he started East, where he expected to locate, having wealth to live at ease. All his possessions were loaded in a wagon, which was driven by the guide, and Dr. Bentley was horseback. About thirty miles from Leavenworth, Kansas, they were attacked by Indians. The guide was killed and Dr. Bentley was pursued by the redskins to the outposts of the soldiers camp at Leavenworth.

AWFUL RIDE.

It was a terrible experience and bullets and arrows whizzed by his head. An arrow lodged in the back his saddle. Galloping up to the soldiers he fell unconscious from his restored to sensi-

address